The education director at Planned Parenthood Association of Utah (PPAU) is "educating" the youth with regard to sex while her husband, a local Planned Parenthood abortionist, rakes in the cash for the corporation and the couple's personal gain via abortion, according to a report from Pro-Life Utah about the "glaring conflict of interest."

Annabel Sheinberg, Education Director at PPAU, "coordinates sex education programs in a number of different schools in the state, mainly located in the Salt Lake & Park City areas," notes the outlet. Sheinberg has coordinated programs that seek to teach children as young as nine years old about sex. According to the outlet, parents complained when the Growing Up Comes First program showed a video that included "an animated erect penis and ejaculation" to elementary students. Further, in a program called Teen Success, participants were mandated to "sign a form saying they understand they will be 'dropped from the group' if they don't maintain their current family size."

Former Planned Parenthood director and whistleblower Abby Johnson claims Planned Parenthood has a track record of using the promotion of contraception to advance the company's abortion bottom line. Johnson revealed during a 2017 "Tucker Carlson Tonight" interview that clinics dole out birth control pills to young girls as another way to gain clients for other services, primarily abortion.

"They provide birth control, because — according to their own numbers — 54% of women who have abortions are using birth control at the time that they get pregnant, so they know that that's just a way to get these young girls ... in there, put them on a pill with a high human error rate, and eventually they're gonna end up pregnant and that's another way to sell them an abortion," said the whistleblower.

Johnson also claimed that "every abortion facility within Planned Parenthood has a monthly abortion quota that they must meet ... because that's how they make their money."

That is where the alleged conflict of interest lies. As noted by Pro-Life Utah, "Annabel claims their programs are about preventing unintended pregnancies, and yet every abortion that her husband performs is money made, which benefits both PPAU and her personally."

Dr. David Turok, married to Annabel, is an abortionist at Planned Parenthood Metro, where unborn babies are killed up to 22 weeks gestation. Turok performs first trimester D&C abortions and second trimester D&E abortions.

Pro-Life Utah reports, "the cheapest abortion a Utah woman can get at Planned Parenthood is $450, with prices rising to over $1,000 at later gestational ages."

Despite the bogus claim that abortion only comprises of 3% of their services, Planned Parenthood is a lucrative corporation because of the roughly 320,000 abortions they perform annually. In fact, a whopping 86% of the company's non-governmental income is from abortion services.

In other words, abortion is the lifeblood of Planned Parenthood. And in Utah, one couple is seemingly finding a way to cash in both personally and for the company.
