

Jessica Kiley, M.D.

Obstetrician-gynecologist; Assistant professor, Northwestern University Feinberg School of Medicine

Dr. Jessica Kiley is an obstetrician-gynecologist in Chicago and a subspecialist in family planning and contraception. She joined the faculty of the Northwestern University Feinberg School of Medicine in 2008, as an Assistant Professor in the Division of General Obstetrics and Gynecology and the Section of Family Planning and Contraception.

Dr. Kiley's practice focuses on providing complete reproductive health care to women, as well as academic activities, including medical education, research, and administration. Dr. Kiley is Director of the Kenneth J. Ryan Residency Training Program and Medical Director of Postpartum Services at Prentice Women's Hospital. She serves on numerous committees at Northwestern Memorial Hospital and the Feinberg School of Medicine. Dr. Kiley has authored peer-reviewed articles on contraceptive technologies and conducts research in women's reproductive health. Her clinical interests include complex contraception and prenatal care.

Lack of Knowledge on Long-Term Contraception Is the Real Danger for Women

Lack of Knowledge on Long-Term Contraception Is the Real Danger for Women
