

SPECIAL REPORT Fixing Health Care

Free medical school for 40 lucky students

In a bold step, the University of Central Florida's new medical school has arranged to offer its entire inaugural class full scholarships totaling $7 million.

By Parija B. Kavalanz, CNNMoney.com senior writer
Last Updated: July 31, 2009: 11:39 AM ET

EMAIL | PRINT | SHARE | RSS

NEW YORK (CNNMoney.com) -- The incoming freshmen at one of the nation's newest medical schools will have more freedom to choose whether to become a specialist or help fill the shortage of primary care doctors.

That's because the students at the University of Central Florida (UCF) in Orlando will have another freedom -- freedom from about $160,000 in debt of four years of medical school.

All 40 students of this charter class that begins Monday have received full scholarships totaling $7 million, donated entirely by members of the community -- including individuals, hospitals, banks and law firms.

"It's the first time that an entire class will go through medical school completely debt free," said Dr. John Prescott, chief academic officer with the Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC). "I've never seen anything quite like this. It's a pretty gutsy thing to do."

UCF's initiative could be a model for reforming health care, allowing more would-be doctors to go into less lucrative but essential fields of medicine. Or it could just be a way for a new medical school to make a splash in the competition for student dollars.

Tom Boyd, senior consultant with Admissions Consultant, a firm that advises clients on college admissions, said most medical schools can't afford to give away education and training. Instead, most offer full or partial scholarships.

"They just don't have the resources to do this," Boyd said. "My view is that UCF is doing this to get its name out there. As a one-time thing, it's a great idea. But can they really do this every year?"

Contributors are sold: Attorney Michael Minton of the firm Dean, Mead, Minton & Zwemer -- whose firm established a $375,000 annual endowment to the medical school -- said the idea was "attracting the best and the brightest" to the school.

But since the new school would have no track record to speak of -- and is not yet a fully accredited medical school -- Minton said they had to find another way to attract the best students.

"So we thought, why not relieve them of their debt burden?," he said. "This levels the playing field for everyone."

In seeking the scholarships, Dr. Deborah German, the dean of the medical school, pointed to Florida's growing shortage of primary care physicians and specialists. About 13% of the state's physicians plan to reduce the scope of their practice or leave medicine in the next five years, according to Florida Department of Health's 2008 annual report.

"We're giving our students the opportunity to come get a medical education free from debt so that they can pursue their passion," German said. "We believe that when they're not in debt, they do their very best work, and they're not handcuffed

COURTESY: JEN VILLAVICENCIO
Jennifer Villavicencio said free tuition at UCF played a big part in her decision to turn down offers to attend medical school at New York University and the University of Pittsburgh.

Quick Vote

What's most important to you when choosing where to retire?

- Affordable homes
- Low taxes
- Good health care
- Low crime
- Nice weather

Vote or View results

COURTESY: UNIVERSITY OF CENTRAL FLORIDA
UCF's College of Medicine (left) in Orlando will be complete next summer. Students in the school's inaugural class will attend classes at a specially designed facility.

COURTESY: BRYANT LAMBE
Bryant Lambe said he's not worried that UCF's new medical school is not yet fully accredited. "We're starting something new," he said.

Top Stories	Most Popular Stories	Most Popular Videos
1. 7 things to know before the bell
2. SoftBank and Toyota want driverless cars to change the world
3. Aston Martin falls 5% in its London IPO
4. Barnes & Noble stock soars 20% as it explores a sale
5. Why it's time for investors to go on the defense

More Galleries

10 of the most luxurious airline amenity kits
When it comes to in-flight pampering, the amenity kits offered by these 10 airlines are the ultimate in luxury More

7 startups that want to improve your mental health
From a text therapy platform to apps that push you reminders to breathe, these self-care startups offer help on a daily basis or in times of need. More

5 radical technologies that will change how you get to work
From Uber's flying cars to the Hyperloop, these are some of the neatest transportation concepts in the works today. More

Original Shows

Tech Talk
Worry about the hackers you don't know
Crime syndicates and government organizations pose a much greater cyber threat than renegade hacker groups like Anonymous. Play

GE CEO: Bringing jobs back to the U.S.
Jeff Immelt says the U.S. is a cost competitive market for advanced manufacturing and that GE is bringing jobs back from Mexico. Play

Innovation Nation
Hamster wheel and wedgie-powered transit
Red Bull Creation challenges hackers and engineers to invent new modes of transportation. Play

All CNNMoney.com Original Shows

to any particular specialty."

The school received more than 4,400 applications for admission, or 110 applications per available spot.

Taking a chance: Jennifer Villavicencio, 22, of Miami was accepted to medical schools at New York University and the University of Pittsburgh. But she turned them down for UCF -- but not without some doubt and concern.

"In the beginning, I was definitely concerned because this is a new medical school," Villavicencio said. "My main concern was about the residency program and whether hospitals would be interested in taking us."

Her concerns were allayed after she met with faculty members who assured her she would be "well-trained" at Orlando Regional Medical Center.

"Of course money was a very big factor for me picking UCF," she said. And after meeting with students in her class and the faculty, she was "surprised by the very high caliber" of both.

Choosing UCF was an easier decision for 21-year-old Bryant Lambe, who attended the university as an undergrad. He said his four years there were "phenomenal," and really wanted to stay another four years.

"Money is always an issue. Without the scholarship, I would have had to look out of state," he said. "Now we're starting something new. All the students are so motivated."

Of the class of 40, more than half are women and 10 come from out of state.

Rethinking the curriculum: Lambe said he's excited about the curriculum, which German said focuses on using technology, such as simulation and animation, for training.

She said human patient mannequin simulators and online interactive virtual patients -- or avatars -- will complement learning from basic science concepts to clinical diagnoses and treatment.

"The advantage of starting something new is that you can do something different and break the mold," said Boyd of Admissions Consultant. "UCF has the advantage of not having a track record. So nothing's holding them back. Most medical schools are very conservative and don't favor radical change."

Grant Heston, a UCF spokesman, said the medical school was granted preliminary accreditation last year by the Liaison Committee on Medical Education (LCME).

"This is the maximum level of accreditation a new medical school can have at this point," Heston said. "Final accreditation comes in the final year of the first class of students. For UCF, that is 2013."

A model?: German said the school is trying to raise funds for next year but added that "in this environment, it might be a challenge."

AAMC's Prescott said other [schools] have taken notice of German's efforts. "It's very difficult for most to replicate this concept of debt-free education," he said.

He said a more realistic hope is that the four-year all-expenses paid opportunity will encourage some of the students to go into primary care rather than higher-paid specialties, as the country faces a "real need" for more primary care doctors.

But whether that wish comes true remains a big question.

"I have heard some students say they would consider taking a couple of years off after graduating to do primary care work, either in or out of the country," said Villavicencio. "I haven't decided what I want to do, but definitely a specialty." ■

First Published: July 31, 2009: 10:42 AM ET

Health care's future may already exist
Family doctors: An endangered breed
Can't pay your doctor? Charge it!

Doctor shortage: Who should fill it?

The U.S. health care system is struggling with a shortage of primary care physicians. CNNMoney.com asked readers -- especially those who are medical professionals -- to weigh in on who can help solve the problem. Here are some responses:
View Photos

FIXING HEALTH CARE

Med students rush to primary care programs

Health care's hidden costs: \$363 billion

California insurer backs away from 59% hike

Health care coverage: Big changes in 2012

California insurer: Audit backs 59% rate hike

Health care: Big change in drug costs for seniors

The fear factor in health care costs
Biggest medical mystery: The bill

Contact Us

Closed Captioning

Site Map

Most stock quote data provided by BATS. Market indices are shown in real time, except for the DJIA, which is delayed by two minutes. All times are ET. Disclaimer.
Morningstar: © 2019 Morningstar, Inc. All Rights Reserved. Factset: FactSet Research Systems Inc.2019. All rights reserved. Chicago Mercantile Association:
Certain market data is the property of Chicago Mercantile Exchange Inc. and its licensors. All rights reserved. Dow Jones: The Dow Jones branded indices are proprietary to and are calculated, distributed and marketed by DJI Opco, a subsidiary of S&P Dow Jones Indices LLC and have been licensed for use to S&P Opco, LLC and CNN. Standard & Poor's and S&P are registered trademarks of Standard & Poor's Financial Services LLC and Dow Jones is a registered trademark of Dow
Jones Trademark Holdings LLC. All content of the Dow Jones branded indices © S&P Dow Jones Indices LLC 2019 and/or its affiliates.

© 2019 Cable News Network. A WarnerMedia Company. All Rights Reserved.Terms under which this service is provided to you. Privacy Policy. AdChoices