Family Planning Fellowship

Fellowships in family planning train physician-leaders in family planning research, education and clinical practice. During the two year program, fellows receive extensive training in all aspects of contraception and abortion care.

Since its inception in 2002, Northwestern's fellowship graduates have gone on to lead other fellowship and residency family planning programs at major US and European academic medical centers and to work for organizations such as the World Health Organization. For further information on Family Planning fellowships, please visit the national website.
