About Me

I grew up in Washington, D.C., in a family where Medicaid was a frequent dinner table conversation. Raised with the belief that smart and compassionate public policy can help shape a better, healthier world, I pursued a degree in Public Policy and American Institutions at Brown University. I also studied theater, music, and Spanish, and spent a semester studying in Buenos Aires, Argentina, where I interned with la Comunidad Homosexual Argentina to investigate discrimination against transgender individuals in the Argentine healthcare system.

After graduating from Brown, I returned to D.C. to work with the Kaiser Family Foundation Commission on Medicaid and the Uninsured while completing a pre-medical post-baccalaureate program at American University. After being accepted to UCSF School of Medicine, I joined my grandparents in the Bay Area to begin my California adventure!

One of my most rewarding experiences during medical school was helping to run a Women's Support Group at a San Francisco Homeless shelter. I also committed myself to helping forward medical education at UCSF as a leader of the Peer Teaching Program and through curricular development work.

Show More

I spent my third year of medical school at Kaiser Permanente in Oakland as one of the 8 UCSF medical students in the Kaiser Longitudinal Integrated Clerkship (KLIC). Through KLIC, I explored the many facets of Ob/Gyn and confirmed my passion for caring for women. I was inspired by the mentorship I received and by the Kaiser Permanente mission to continuously improve the quality and delivery of healthcare. I'm absolutely thrilled to be rejoining Oakland Medical Center and to have the privilege of working with and caring for this incredible community.

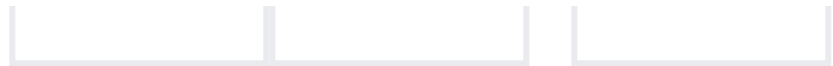

Outside of medicine, I relish spending time with family and friends, hiking, dancing, playing and watching basketball (Go Dubs!), traveling, playing saxophone, and going to the theater. I'm also a lover of food and fitness and am always on the lookout for a new recipe, restaurant, or workout class.
