's summer Community Health in Motion event, ensuring student athletes know how to avoid injuries is just as important. Providence Milwaukie Hospital physical therapist Jeremy Johnson encourages student Jessica Schnur, 14, to work on strengthening her knees before starting school volleyball in the fall. Jeremy was among the many volunteers, including family medicine attending physicians and residents -- such as Dr. Joanna Hooper (center), a third-year resident -- who helped with the recent clinic. More than 130 students received free sports physicals.
