

The News & Observer

July 29, 1992

Edition: FINAL

Section: NEWS

Page: B1

Topics:

Index Terms:

LEAD

abortion

death

lawsuit

Clarence J. Washington

Mary Ann Dancy

Clinic, doctor sued in death Woman's family cites abortion

Author: PAMELA BABCOCK; Staff writer

Article Text:

RALEIGH -- The family of an Enfield woman is suing a former Raleigh clinic and a doctor, saying the woman bled to death after a botched abortion two years ago.

In a suit filed in Wake County Superior Court, the family of Mary Ann Dancy says a doctor at the former Fleming Center lacerated the woman's cervix during a procedure, then refused to return telephone calls later in the evening. Dancy was 32.

The Fleming Center on Hayworth Street in North Raleigh was the city's first clinic that performed abortions.

Its founder, Dr. Paul Fleming, died in 1989, and the building was sold in 1991 to the Raleigh Women's Health Organization Inc., which still retains its records but is not affiliated with the former practice.

Dr. Clarence J. Washington, the doctor named in the suit, now works at Carolina Women's Clinic in Fayetteville. Washington, 45, could not be reached for comment Tuesday. Bob Monroe, a Raleigh lawyer who has represented Washington in the past, said he was unfamiliar with the suit and declined to comment.

According to statistics compiled by the National Abortion Federation, a Washington-based professional association of abortion providers, one in 200,000 women who have legal abortions die.

"There are doctors who do abortions who don't do them as well as they should, just as there are doctors doing tonsillectomies who don't do them as well as they should," said Barbara Radford, executive director of the federation.

Mary Ann Dancy's sister, Carolyn, who lives in Rocky Mount and filed the suit, said she, her sister and a male friend went to the Raleigh clinic July 27, 1990. Carolyn Dancy said the abortion was performed about 4 p.m.

"She seemed all right, she walked to the car," she said. Her sister had what she considered normal bleeding after the abortion. When she got home, she took a bath and went up to her bedroom, but her condition worsened.

Mary Ann Dancy was taken to Halifax Memorial Hospital, where she died after surgery shortly before midnight, Carolyn Dancy said.

An autopsy showed that Dancy died because of a "cervical laceration," the suit says. At the time of her death, she was the mother of five children, who ranged in age from two to 17.

Raleigh attorney Michael Anderson, who has taken over the suit, declined comment on it Tuesday, but confirmed that a previous attorney had been disbarred and said the statute of limitations on such a case is two years after the death.

Radford, of the Abortion Federation, said such injuries during an abortion are "not that unusual," largely because it's a blind procedure.

"It's essentially done by feel," she said. In most cases, she said, the injuries are not fatal, but heal by themselves or are corrected by surgery.

Washington, a 1974 graduate of the University of Michigan Medical School, was licensed with a specialty in gynecology in North Carolina in 1988. His license has never been suspended, revoked or placed on probationary status, said Ann Norris, a spokesman for the N.C. Board of Medical Examiners.

Copyright 1992 by The News & Observer Pub. Co.

Record Number: RNOB92987