Shannon was very pleasant and enthusiastic student who got along well with the health care team.

Ms. Carr's tutor for the second year of the Basic Clerkship observed:

Shannon showed excellent progress. Her interactions with patients are professional. Her physical examination skills are good, and her written work is very strong.

CLINICAL SCIENCE CORE

The following are comments taken from evaluations submitted by attending and resident physicians who supervised Ms. Carr during the Clinical Science Core. The evaluations are presented in the order in which the rotations were completed.

Family Practice: Shannon was very eager to learn. She is an exceptional student. PASS

Internal Medicine: Shannon was reliable and thorough. She is already developing that sixth sense about differentiating between who is sick and who is not that any good physician needs. She adjusted quickly to clinical demands and became actively involved with the patients. She established good rapport and easily integrated herself into the team. She demonstrated independent learning through literature searches and use of a computer database. She functioned well above her training level. She is extremely hard working, highly compassionate, and mature. She is very much a team player. She has an amazing fund of knowledge. She is an eager and energetic student who has good rapport with her patients. She often made useful suggestions. Shannon is very conscientious and provided optimal care for her patients. Her enthusiastic spirit and positive attitude were refreshing. In the outpatient setting she was very motivated and did a good job. HONORS

Psychiatry: Shannon turned in a very good performance. She was particularly impressive in regard to her motivation. She was very available and worked very long hours. She asked many excellent questions. She was very sensitive and empathic with patients. She was well informed about her patients. She worked very well independently. Shannon is bright, thorough, and conscientious. She has an excellent grasp of medical concepts and expresses herself orally and in writing with impressive skill. She is both caring and curious. PASS

Dean's Letter of Evaluation for Shannon Louise Carr, '00:

Shannon's overall performance as a student fellow was excellent. She rotated through the autopsy service, surgical pathology, microbiology, cytopathology, chemistry, and immunopathology. She spent one month in Boston working in gynecological pathology at Brigham and Women's Hospital. Her evaluations were excellent. Shannon worked diligently and showed excellent medical knowledge. She was invariably upbeat and enthusiastic.

Shannon became actively engaged in our teaching program for first and second year medical students. She was very effective in this role, and her work was unusually well received by the students.

Shannon's fellowship experience has provided her with an exceptionally strong background in gynecologic pathology. She was an excellent student fellow.

ADVANCED BASIC SCIENCE CORE

Ms. Carr completed the Advanced Basic Science Core in January of 1998. She earned a grade of "pass" in all her courses. The Advanced Basic Science Core is graded on a pass/fail basis only. No honors grades are awarded.

SENIOR SELECTIVE PROGRAM

During the final Senior Selective phase of the curriculum, currently in progress, Ms. Carr has received the following evaluations. The evaluations are presented in the order in which the rotations were completed.

Nurse Midwifery Service, Fletcher Allen Health Care, Burlington, Vermont: Shannon is a quiet, concerned care provider. She has excellent patient rapport and is sensitive to psychosocial concerns. PASS

Acting Internship in General Obstetrics: Shannon assisted in seventeen vaginal deliveries and several cesarean sections. She did numerous evaluations of patients for possible labor or ruptured membranes. She was certified in the skills of cervical examinations, sterile speculum examinations, spontaneous vaginal deliveries, and newborn care. She is an excellent team player who was very willing to help in all functions. She has excellent technical skills and very good patient interaction skills. She is eager to learn, diligent, and resourceful. She has good interpersonal skills. She was able to be flexible with her approach to her patients. She has a great sense of humor. She is hard working, and she takes criticism well. She was always eager to learn. HONORS

Clinical Infertility, University of Arizona College of Medicine, Tucson, Arizona: Shannon Carr has an excellent fund of general medical knowledge. She is well read in obstetrics and gynecology. She was knowledgeable regarding her patients. She showed excellent problem solving and judgement. She was able to prioritize patients' problems with multiple and complex conflicting variables. She is a true self-starter. She took responsibility for her educational experience. She was always present for weekend patients and procedures. She took extra overnight call to gain experience in labor and delivery. Shannon has excellent rapport with patients, staff, and colleagues. She has good skills in history taking and physical examination and has solid basic obstetrical and gynecological examination skills. She developed competence with specialized procedures including transvaginal ultrasound. HONORS (unofficial)

Acupuncture, Burlington, Vermont: Ms. Carr is astute, focused, and eager to learn. Her diligence to the patients' needs and her reliability to the office's needs were outstanding. Her presence puts patients at ease. She read extensively on her own and posed relevant questions. She was very attentive. She was open minded and willing to learn outside her usual paradigm. HONORS (unofficial)

Independent Study on Ethical Issues in Obstetrics and Gynecology around the Globe: Shannon's work in this independent study was outstanding. She worked to achieve a solid understanding of foundational ethical principles and concepts through her careful reading of both core bioethics texts and classic articles in obstetrics and gynecology ethics. Through increasingly self-directed readings on ethics and global population policy, she focused on readings that tied in with her plans to work in clinics in Nepal in the upcoming year. Most impressive was her decision to culminate her independent study with a project that would not merely advance her own knowledge and skills, but also those of her peers and professors as well. She organized an expert panel discussion on "Global Population Policy as it Affects Reproductive Choice: An Ethical Dilemma." She structured the panel in advance and served as a skillful facilitator of the session, responding effectively and creatively to moderate the presentation, and structure an informative and provocative teaching session. HONORS

(Extramural rotations at non-affiliated sites are officially graded as pass or fail only. Official honors grades may only be awarded by faculty of the additional training in pathology and by her interest and experience in international health.

Ms. Carr has chosen to pursue further training in the field of obstetrics and gynecology. Her conscientious, thorough, and compassionate approach to patient care will make her a welcome and effective contributor to the residency program that is fortunate to match with her.

The University of Vermont College of Medicine does not calculate or otherwise identify a class rank. Using the rating scale below I am pleased to endorse Ms. Carr as an excellent house officer candidate. This endorsement is based on my assessment of her overall performance in our curriculum.

KEY TO TRANSCRIPT

Prior to September 1967, the work of students was evaluated on the basis of 100 percent. The lowest passing grade was 75 percent except in the case of minor subjects. In the first and second years, the passing grade for each minor subject was 75 percent. In the third year, a grade of 60 percent was accepted for individual minor subjects, but the average for a group of minor subjects must have been 75 percent.

September 1967-August 1969, the work of students was evaluated on the basis of A, B, C, and F. The lowest passing grade was C.

In September of 1969, the College adopted a pass/fail method of student evaluation:

P or Pass	= satisfactory completion of all course work
F or Fail	= less than satisfactory performance
Fail/Pass	= less than satisfactory performance in initial endeavor, course repeated and makeup work evaluated as satisfactory.

Beginning with the class entering in September 1981 (Class of 1985 and those following), student performance has been graded in courses and clinical rotations taught or supervised by the faculty of the University of Vermont College of Medicine on the basis of honors, pass, or fail. However, the following courses are/were graded on a pass/fail basis without any honors grade option:

Basic Clerkship	Doctoring in Vermont
Case Studies in Health and Illness	Human Behavior
Clinical Electives during the Basic Science Core	Medical Sexuality
Doctoring Skills	Physician and Society
	Physician in Society

Courses in the Advanced Basic Science Core have been graded on a pass/fail basis beginning with the Class of 1994.

Courses and clinical rotations not supervised by the University of Vermont College of Medicine faculty are recorded as pass or fail on our transcript, though the faculty evaluator at another institution may have awarded a different grade based on the grading system in effect at the other institution.

Course work is completed only when grades appear. All courses without grades have not yet been completed.
